

Hill Wilson elected to two key AAJ positions

PHILADELPHIA – Personal-injury and nursing-home negligence attorney Rhonda Hill Wilson of Bryn Mawr, who practices in Philadelphia, was recently elected to serve as the Parliamentarian for the American Association for Justice (AAJ). She was also appointed by AAJ president Anthony Tarricone to serve as the organization’s Diversity Taskforce Chair. The annual AAJ national officers’ elections took place at a Membership Business Meeting on July 29 in San Francisco.

Her goals serving in this capacity are to support existing AAJ programs, to increase and enhance membership and to implement new programs in leadership development and diversity. As chair of the AAJ Diversity Taskforce, Hill Wilson will work with group leaders to develop a diversity plan that spans the spectrum of the organization.

During the last few years Hill Wilson has supported the AAJ in various roles and has volunteered countless hours to the organization’s initiatives. She has served as an educator, faculty member and speaker at the 2009 AAJ Annual Convention and the AAJ’s Trial Advocacy College educational programs. She has also served as a member of the organization’s Executive and Membership Oversight Committees and the National Finance, Justice List, Law Schools and Organization Review Committees.
