

MAIN LINE TODAY

Women on the Move

We salute 13 leaders making an impact on the Main Line.

BY DAWN E. WARDEN PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER 19, 2008 AT 10:38 AM

It was our good fortune to convince more than a dozen of the area's most powerful and promising women to slow down just long enough to let us in on some personal and professional highlights. And while their journeys are unique, they all agree that making the leap from good to great takes strong communication skills, perseverance, a clear vision and the ability to bring out the best in others.

Rhonda Hill Wilson

Attorney

The first woman in her family to earn an advanced degree, Rosemont's Rhonda Hill Wilson has been a practicing attorney for 30-plus years, specializing in injury law for the past 14. Through it all, her faith in the justice system has never wavered. "There are a lot of individual voices that don't get heard," says Wilson, who earned her law degree from American University in Washington, D.C. "People just want someone to be fair. I urge jurors everywhere to be open to the process and to be aware of your biases. If you can't be fair, be honest."

Wilson latched onto the dream of being an attorney when she was a young girl, and she never saw gender as a hindrance. "I'm a daredevil," she says. "The more you tell me I can't do something, the more I'll want it."